■ Message from the President

The year 2010 has witnessed the slow recovery of the world economy from the international financial crisis. While the economic recovery remains fragile and uneven, global challenges such as climate change, energy security and food security remain acute. Under such circumstances, the global structure has undergone potential transformation, with the rising of emerging powers and reinforcing of multilateralism. During the above process, China has reinforced its cooperation and coordination with other countries and the international community, and contributed to world peace, stability and development.

As the think tank of Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, dedicating to researches on international issues to serve China's diplomacy, China Institute of International Studies (CIIS) has actively carried out Track II and public diplomacy. In 2010, the CIIS carries out series of research projects pertinent to regional and global hotspot issues and expanded its national and international influence by establishing broader contacts with governments, research institutes and cultural & educational institutions at home and abroad. So far, the CIIS has successfully hosted 12 international academic conferences, 7 CIIS Forums, received more than 100 delegations from different countries and organized 88 delegations to visit abroad.

The year 2011 marks the beginning of the second decade of the 21st century. It is also a crucial year for China to implement the 12th five-year guideline. The CIIS is committed to actively engage in Track II and public diplomacy, and continue to provide our policy recommendations to China's foreign policy-makers.

With the beginning of the new year, everything takes on a new look. Let's look forward to a brighter future of the CIIS. On this occasion, I would like, on behalf of the CIIS, to wish all of you a prosperous and happy new year.

About us

Mission and General Information

China Institute of International Studies (CIIS) is the think tank of China's Ministry of Foreign Affairs. It conducts research and analysis focused primarily on medium and long-term policy issues of strategic importance, particularly those concerning international politics and world economy. It also carries out research and offers policy recommendations on major international events and hot-spot issues.

The Institute was founded in 1956 under the name of Institute of International Relations (IIR), China Academy of Science, and later changed to Institute of International Relations. It assumed the present name in December 1986. In 1998, China Center for International Studies (CCIS), formerly a research institution under the China's State Council, was incorporated into the CIIS. Successive presidents of the Institute include Meng Yongqian, Yao Zhongming, Li Huichuan, Zheng Weizhi, Wang Shu, Du Gong, Yang Chengxu, Song Mingjiang, Ma Zhengang. The current president is Qu Xing.

The Institute currently has seven research departments, namely Department for International Strategic Studies, Department for American Studies, Department for Asia-Pacific Security and Cooperation, Department for EU Studies, Department for Developing Countries Studies, Department for Shanghai Cooperation Organization Studies, Department for World Economy and Development Studies. In addition, there are several Research Centers, focusing respectively on the study of European Union, the Middle East, the South Pacific, China's Energy Strategy, Peripheral Security and World Economy and Security, etc.

The staff of the CIIS consists of nearly one hundred researchers and other professionals. Among them are senior diplomats, leading area-study specialists, and preeminent experts in major fields of foreign affairs. Young scholars at the CIIS all have advanced university degree in I.R. or related disciplines.

Organizations

Department for International Strategic Studies

The Department of Global Strategy of the CIIS aims to gain birds-eye views on international relations, focusing primarily on international structure, international order, big power relations, geo-politics issues, globalization as well as China's relations with the outside world. It tries to capture new trends in international affairs and producing in-depth policy analysis. Theoretical explanation of China's foreign policy is also high on the research agenda of the Department.

Department for American Studies

The Department of American Studies conducts researches primarily on the foreign policy of the United States and on political, economic, military, social, and cultural factors that have a bearing on U.S. foreign policy orientations, in particular on its China policy orientations, with a view to making policy recommendations, and to following and analyzing developments of the U.S. relations with Canada and countries in Latin America.

2010 CIIS Research Projects

Research is the cornerstone of the CIIS, contributing to China's diplomacy. In 2010, the CIIS has carried out a series of research projects pertinent to hotspot issues and long term policy issues.

The Global Financial Crisis and Changes of International Regime

This Project was conducted by Mr. Zhen Bingxi, Mr. Liu Feitao and Ms. Su Xiaohui. It contains three parts: "The changes in economic fields and related regimes", "the changes in world political regime" and "the changes in security regime".

"The changes in economic fields and related regimes" analyzes the trend of world economy, the reform and future framework of international financial regime, the changes of international trade and investment, globalization and regionalization, etc.

"The changes in world political regime" focuses on the power changes of the great powers and their relations, the changes of the US position as the only superpower, the trend of the "rising" process of the emerging countries.

"The changes in security regime" studies the military expenses of major powers as well as China's neighboring countries, in order to analyze the influence of the financial crisis on security policies by the countries concerned.

The Obama Administration's Policy on Climate Change

The project, conducted by Mr. Liu Qing, Ms. Yuan Jian and Mr. Wang Ruibin, focuses on how the Obama administration would bring changes to the U.S. policy on climate change, the role of interest groups in designing U.S. climate change policy, bipartisan debate on American climate policy at the Congress, and what impact the U.S. climate policy change would exert on the process of international negotiation on climate change.

Climate change is among the most complex problems on the domestic and foreign policy agenda in the United States. There is a major divergence among different industries and the debates occur between the Republican and Democratic parties. During the Bush administration, the U.S. was accused of being reluctant to make commitments on cutting greenhouse gas emissions. It refused to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, a key international legal instrument setting specific goals for countries to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions by 2012. After Barrack Obama took the office, the U.S. changed its attitude to managing global warming and committed itself to taking the lead in the global efforts to advance green economy. The 111th US Congress also took some positive actions vis-a-vis the call from the administration, and some more related bills are in the pipeline.

China-EU Relations: The Trend and Policy in the Wake of Global Crisis

The project chair is Dr. Cui Hongjian, other participants from the CIIS are Mr. Hu Dawei, Mr. Tong Tianqi, Mr. Liu Jiansheng, Ms. Jin Ling and Ms. Li Weiwei.

The global economic and financial crisis is expediting the transition of geopolitics while promoting changes in the international economic system. As a result, the relations between China and its main strategic partners are in a process of revision. As the biggest international organization of the developed countries in the world, the European Union plays an important role in China's development and external affairs. To study on China-EU relations with the focus on the fields of economic and trade, energy, security and global issues as climate change would be helpful for understanding the challenges to both sides and potential cooperation between two sides. Therefore, researchers from the European Studies Department, the CIIS started this project.

At the end of the project, the team successfully produced 8 papers on the following issues: 1. An Interpol World: The European Scholar's View on Current International Order; 2. Viewpoints of European Officials and Scholars on International System, Lisbon Treaty and China-EU Relations; 3. Problems and Solutions in China-EU Economic and Trade Relation; 4. China-EU Cooperation in Climate Change during the Period of Post-Copenhagen; 5. EU's Lisbon 2020 Strategy and Its Impact on China-EU Relations; 6. Energy Competition and Cooperation between China and EU in the Central Asia; 7. EU Eastward enlargement and Its Influence; 8. China-EU Security Cooperation in a Changing Security Situation.

Afghanistan Issue

This project research started from March, 2009 and ended in April, 2010. Ms. Liu Jinkun was the chair of the project and other participants included Mr. Rong Ying, Mr. Zheng Ruixiang and Ms. Li Qingyan.

The results of the research mainly include three research reports, two international materials and one field investigation report. This research has great significance in terms of the real situation in Afghanistan and its neighboring regions so as to evaluate the impact of development in Afghanistan for China. After President Barack Obama took office, the United States announced a new Afghanistan-Pakistan strategy which would produce great influence to the "war on terror" in Afghanistan, the stability of Pakistan and the geopolitical strategic situation around Afghanistan as well as the new game among big powers. China should have a clear understanding about the development of the situation and properly handle the regional challenges.

Reflections on Sino-Indian Relations during the Post-Cold War Era

"Reflections on Sino-Indian Relations in the Post-Cold War Era", is the Sub-project No. 1 of "Study on Sino-Indian Relations after the Cold War", which is a comprehensive research project sponsored by the China's Ministry of Education and organized by Fudan University based in Shanghai.

The sub-project is co-chaired by Mr. Lan Jianxue with China Institute of International Studies (CIIS) and Mr. Sun Shihai with Chinese Academy of Social Sciences(CASS), with one regular member of Mr. Shi Hongyuan associated with the Graduate School of CASS and some other part-time assistants. The project started from March 2009 and will likely conclude in December 2011.

The sub-project traces the trajectory of Sino-Indian relations during the Post-Cold War era, explores those main factors driving the bilateral relationship and common grounds for future cooperation, and makes feasible recommendations for some establishments concerned.

Members of the sub-project have so far published in renowned Chinese periodicals some papers and thesis including:

- Lan Jianxue, "Common Grounds for Future Sino-Indian Cooperation," South Asian Studies Quarterly, Issue No. 2, 2010;
- Shi Hongyuan, "On Strength of Indian Energy Diplomacy," South Asian Studies, Issue No. 1, 2010;
- Shi Hongyuan, "Diaspora Indians on the rise of India", International Forum, Issue No. 4, 2009
- Lan Jianxue, "China-Nepal Relations in the 21st Century: From a Perspective of National Interests," South Asian Studies, Issue No. 4, 2009.

Eurasia Economic and Social Development Strategic Planning Program (European Chapter)

This project was conducted by Amb. Yang Chengxu, Mr. Wang Zhenyu and Ms. Sun Lixin. It contains three parts, namely, "European Economic Development in 2008 and Outlook", "European Regional Economic and Social Development Strategic Planning" and "Norwegian Economic and Social Development Strategic Planning".

"European Economic Development in 2008 and Outlook" presented a general review of the European economic performance in 2008, indicating that European economy was in recession in 2008, which would continue in 2009 before the economy could grow at a low speed in 2010.

On the basis of a general introduction of Europe, "European Regional Economic and Social Development Strategic Planning" reviewed the recent major incidents and hot issues involving Europe, analyzed its economic performance in the past five years. Special attention was given to China-Europe cooperation. It was indicated that the Lisbon Treaty would provide a more homogenous investment market for the Chinese enterprises and the global financial crisis presented a good opportunity for the Chinese enterprises to invest in Europe. Manufacturing, infrastructure building, outsourcing, and low carbon economy would be potential areas for cooperation.

"Norwegian Economic and Social Development Strategic Planning" was a detailed analysis of the investment environment of Norway which concluded with an SWOT analysis for the reference of interested enterprises.

EU Policy Change toward Africa and Its Impacts on China's Presence in Africa

This project is chaired by Dr. Jin Ling. Based on plenty of document studies and interviews conducted both in China and different European countries, the report deeply analyzed the background and the main contents of EU policy changes toward Africa and its impacts on China's presence in Africa. The key findings were as follows:

- Strategic concerns, including "model competition with emerging countries", and security, energy, economic interests are the main driving forces behind EU's policy changes.
- EU main policy changes toward Africa have been clearly demonstrated in peace and security, aid, good governance and human rights, economy and energy areas.
- Generally speaking, under the "partnership" spirit, EU policy toward Africa put more emphasis on "burden sharing and mutual benefits" which asks more cooperation from the African side from different levels.
- EU's policy changes try to transform its "soft power" in Africa into a kind of "smart power" that makes its value and interests promotion more easily.
- While opening new doors for EU-China cooperation in Africa, EU policy changes also put "normative" and "competitive" pressures on China's presence in Africa from different levels and different policy areas which would request China to adjust its policy accordingly.

Turkish Foreign Minister Visited the CIIS

On November 1, Turkish Foreign Minister, H.E. Mr. Ahmet Davutoğlu visited the CIIS and had a roundtable discussion with the research fellows on "Contribution of Turkish-Chinese Strategic Cooperation to Global and Regional Peace". The CIIS President Qu Xing hosted the discussion.

In his keynote speech of the meeting, Mr. Davutoğlu pointed out that China and Turkey always maintains close and friendly cooperation in politics, economics and culture. As two big developing countries, China and Turkey were playing more and more important roles regionally and globally. The need for further cooperation was proved by the recent high level visits from the leaders of both countries. And, the issue of Joint Declaration on the Establishment and Development of a Strategic Relationship of Cooperation would further promote the bilateral relations.

China International Studies

The English-language journal China International Studies was formally launched on December 12, 2005. Patronized by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China and sponsored by China Institute of International Studies, is the first and only (until now) English academic publication in China on diplomacy and international politics for formal circulation.

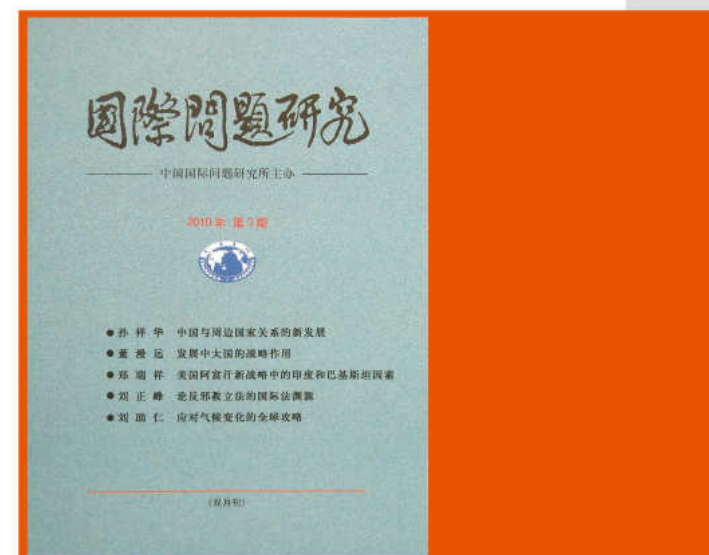

The journal is dedicated to the examination and analysis of hot issues in international politics, world economy, international security and global strategy. It pursues a serious and down-to-earth style and introduces the latest progress in academic research. With such columns as China's Diplomacy, International Relations, International Politics, World Economy, the journal is also a ready reference for the academic community, research institutes, government policy-makers and readers who are interested in international issues.

Publications

International Studies

International Studies is one of the earliest academic journals published by the research circle of China devoted to international studies. As a political, policy-conscious and theoretical publication, it exerts an increasing academic influence both in China and abroad. In light of the objective of serving diplomatic work and closely following the latest academic developments at home and abroad, the journal publishes the latest achievements in international studies by carrying analyses on major events and developments in international relations with special attention to new ideas and theories. The main columns are: International Politics, World Economy, International Security and Strategy, Hot Issues, International Relations and International Law Theories, New People and New Writings, Internal and External Academic Exchanges, Book Review and News in Brief. Pursuing a serious and down-to-earth style and using succinct language, the journal encourages well-grounded views and solid information and promotes tolerance, enhancement and academic democracy in theoretical research. New thoughts are fostered and young researchers are encouraged to display their talent. The journal is well received by readers from the research circle of international studies, colleges and universities, as well as those interested in international issues.

Library

The CIIS Library is the leading professional library in China pertaining to international studies. Its main function is to collect and stockpile documents and reference materials for research work at the CIIS, and also offers reference and consultation service to the general public.

The library was established in 1956, just the same year as the founding of the institute, but its collection dates to the early 1920s, when it found its origin in the library of China Political Science Association. It later expanded by taking over collections from the libraries of the Foreign Ministry of Kuomintang government, Shenyang South Manchurian Railway, and other agencies. The collection enjoys a history of nearly 90 years.

At present, the library has built up a total collection of over 250,000 volumes in Chinese, English, French, Russian, German, Japanese, and Spanish, half of which are in English. The collection covers a wide range of subjects relating to politics, economy, military, foreign policy, and international law, etc, prioritizing on international relations, international organizations, diplomatic documents, international treaties and legal documents.

One of the most important features is that the library holds more than 30,000 copies of reference materials, and most importantly there are a complete and continuous run of diplomatic documents, international treaties and conventions, and yearbooks. Most of the items are collected from their first issue to the present. These include complete sets of Encyclopedia Britannica, Foreign Relation of the United States, American Foreign Relations; a Documentary Record, Public Papers of the President of the United States, Congressional Record, ДокументывнешнейполитикиСССР.Т., Documents Diplomatiques Francias, Documents on German Foreign Policy,日本外交文書デジタルアーカイブ, League of Nations Treaty Series, UN Treaty Series, Hertslets China Treaties, British and Foreign States Papers, Keesing's Contemporary Archives, Facts on File, The Statesmen's Yearbook, The European World Yearbook, International Trade Statistics Yearbook, International Who's Who, Current Biography, Cumulative Book Index, The Foreign Affairs Bibliography, Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications, New York Times Index, The Times Index, etc.

The library also holds more than 400 kinds of periodicals and newspapers covering broad range in Chinese, English, French, Russian, German, Japanese, Spanish, etc. It subscribes to about 150 different kinds of foreign newspapers and periodicals and 150 Chinese ones each year. Most of them are collected with earlier editions and copies, such as Foreign Affairs, Newsweek, Time, Economist, U.S. News and World Report, Fortune(International ed.), Business Week(International ed.), The New York Times(City ed.), The Times(Late London Air ed.), International Legal Materials, etc.

Furthermore, the library has a unique collection of precious earlier versions of international atlas, such as The Times Atlas of the World, National Geographic Atlas of the World, The International Atlas, Philips' International Atlas, The Royal Atlas of Modern Geography, etc.

The collection is managed and controlled through a computer network, by which books and journals are catalogued, searched and retrieved. All these search tools are conveniently available to the readers for access to books and data-processing facilities at the library.

Owing to the rich and valuable collection, the CIIS Library enjoys high reputation in the fields of international studies across China. The Library provides a range of services for the members of the CIIS and the staff in MFA. It offers reference and consultation service to researchers and graduate students from the other institutes and universities of China. Meanwhile, the library also provides limited service to the foreign scholars and students.
